

The SAM.gov Modernization Effort

The U.S. General Services Administration's Integrated Award Environment (IAE) is engaged in a multi-year effort to transition 10 online federal award management systems into one streamlined environment.

By unifying key functionalities in a cloud-based 'app store' and data factory, the IAE aims to reduce the burden for those who wish to do business with the federal government. The IAE is using best practices in Agile methodology to modernize into the new environment.

The current SAM.gov: The System for Award Management is the current entity registration site for anyone seeking awards from the federal government. The largest of the 10 IAE systems, today's SAM.gov will be the final site to transition into the new environment.

Transition.SAM.gov: This will be the temporary home for all of the functions of the IAE's 10 current systems as we transition them into the new environment. Each of the 10 systems will continue to exist for a time, but users will start to be redirected to transition.SAM.gov to complete their intended activity.

The (new) SAM.gov: At the conclusion of the IAE's modernization effort, all of the IAE's award management functions will be united under the umbrella of SAM.gov, which will become a one-stop-shop for federal contract and assistance management.

For More Information

Visit www.gsa.gov/iae for more information about the IAE modernization strategy or contact iaeoutreach@gsa.gov with further questions.